SECTION 3: AUTISM

Now we come on to the next topic which is something that affects many people in Northern Ireland today, that is, autism. We are interested in getting a picture of the general public's perceptions of Autism, what they think it is and general attitudes around it.

DEFINITION:

'high functioning' means the person with autism will have a normal or higher than average IQ, and can have a certain degree of independence, although they may find socialising with other people difficult. Someone described as 'low functioning' will have serious learning difficulties as well as problems socialising, and will usually be quite dependent for help in everyday living.

'High functioning ' is a term which indicates that the person has autism, that is, they may have difficulties with social and communication skills, and that they are of average or above average intelligence. They do not have learning difficulties
